Mod ideas

Cold Firewood: Basically, this mod shows you an animated stock of firewood on the top left corner of your screen. The main purpose of this is to visually show the user how much heat their computer is generating during the course of gameplay. The fire wood will be slowly smoking till it ends up in flames in accordance to how much heat is generated like a campfire. But you won't just watch your campfire end up in flames. The groundbreaking feature of this mod is that unlike performance mods, which try to boost fps and overall hardware speed while keeping all the perks of a good gameplay, this mod ensures your pc's hardware components hardly ever heats from such heavy and highly performable gameplay experience even with about 110 mods for a low spec pc minimum. The idea might sound easy on paper but to achieve this quality feature even on a low spec computer will be a lot of work in mastering a lot of techniques involving hardware and software. Work with this as a base idea and build up more features from there like for example, customizing the colour of the flames of the firewood but since preventing that is the point what about customizing the animations of the firewood when it is cool or when set in flames and also a dark frozen cloud that will come and zap you frozen for a brief pause so that the mod can have enough time to run cooling processes. This is of course automatic during gameplay but this feature is important when the user's pc exceeds a temperature that the mod can't recover while in the background as the game is running simultaneously. Some rough ideas on this: use the borrow checking system of rust and somehow apply that to the computer hardware during gameplay to cool things off. Or create virtual hardware components that some mods can use rather than the actual hardware so that mods that really depend on it can use them.

Laugh Before Respawn: This mod idea tends to add a funny animated replay of how you died shortly before the menu for respawn and spectate. This is inspired from the among us game where there are funny animated replays of your deaths by imposter. Use this idea as a base and build off from there. Don't forget to add funny voices that say things like "Brutality" after your death in the replay
